Most of the time, our book review section focuses on a novel or a short story. This month is a little different. Instead, How to Lie with Statistics(统计数字) is a simple little book that teaches readers to tell good and bad statistics.

At the heart of the book is a problem Statistics provide a powerful way to strengthen an argument or an opinion. Unfortunately, statistics are also both easily misunderstood and controlled. That is a problem because many people are not able to understand when numbers are used to give wrong information. The easiest way to solve this problem is to give people the ability to understand statistics.

How to Lie with Statistics tries to do just that. Often used as a textbook for math classes, it is surprisingly easy to read and understand. It's also very useful. Each of the book's ten units focuses on one way that people use statistics incorrectly or improperly.

How to Lie with Statistics has a light and fun tone. It teaches with both simple explanations and fun examples. It includes a lot of cartoon pictures. Written in 1954, the book quickly became popular. Despite its age, the examples in the book are still useful and easy to follow.

Readers should also be aware that this book isn't really a textbook. Although the book gives important ideas about statistics, it doesn't actually teach you math. The author, Darrel Huff, wasn't a mathematician(数学家). Instead, he was a journalist.

The book is a wonderful resource for readers. Traditionally it has been used as an extra text for students from many different subjects. It also proves useful for anyone who wants to develop their critical thinking.

W: That's right. But I stopped painting when my twin daughters were born. I thought about teaching art classes part-time, instead I started making toy animals for my daughters. I love acting, so I often invented little plays for the toy animals, doing the voices myself.

M: And when did you start doing shows for other people?

W: When our daughters were five, I wanted to do something different at their birthday party. I wrote a little show and built a mini-theatre. My daughters and their friends loved it. As a result, other parents asked me to do the show at their children's parties. That's how it all began.

M: It must be a lot of work for you?

W: Yes. I needed someone to help me. Luckily, my neighbor Linda, was keen to perform with me. Her husband records the music to go with the shows. It would be impossible to do everything on my own.

M: Have you ever had any problems?

W: Only once. I did a show for a group of three-year-olds, and I'd written a story about a lion. Unfortunately, the children were really afraid of the lion and started crying. The experience taught me that I had to find out beforehand what children enjoy.

M: And the shows continue to be successful?

W: They do. I love every minute of every show, and so other people love them too. I certainly didn't realize when I organized that birthday party for my daughters all those years ago that it would change my life so much.

If you're looking for an extra special present for yourself or friend, why not book a flight in a hot air balloon! These exciting trips give you the chance to enjoy a really unusual view of the countryside.

For a successful flight, we need light winds. It's also important that there's no rain and that we have a clear sky. If there is too much cloud, we'll cancel the flight and your trip will be arranged for another date.

The temperature in the air is similar to that on the ground, so you should wear casual outdoor clothes. Also, you must remember to wear boots. That's because you may have to walk in wet and dirty fields at the end of the trip!

The direction that the flight takes usually depends on the wind. The pilot will choose a suitable landing place which may be between 5 and 30 kilometers from the airfield we start from. But don't worry because transport is provided – a mini-bus will collect you.

All our flights take place in the evening and departure times depends on when the sun sets. The season starts in March, and in May, for example, the flights would be at 6:00 p.m. The last flights are in October, and after that we close for the winter.

If you would like to book a flight or to receive more information about hot air balloons, just feel free to call us. It will be a trip you never forget.
